

Urban LandMark

rethinking emerging land markets in rapidly growing Southern African (and other) cities

1 & 2 November 2010

The Forum | Turbine Hall | Newtown |
Johannesburg

MAKING URBAN LAND MARKETS WORK FOR THE POOR

Urban LandMark and the Mail & Guardian present perfecting the apartheid city? interrogating South Africa's urban spatial development 16 years after democracy

South Africa is southern Africa's most urbanised country. 60% of South Africans live in cities, and this figure is growing. By 2050, eight out of every 10 citizens will live in our urban areas.

If these figures are to be believed, South Africa's future social and political stability rests on the capacity of cities to provide livelihoods for new and existing urban dwellers. While the scale of urban growth in South Africa is significant, the numbers do not tell the whole story about how cities grow...

Urban LandMark

making urban land markets work for the poor

- what is the nature of urban spatial development in South Africa?
- are our cities becoming more or less inclusive?
- how do we address the critical issues of poverty, inequality, access to land, housing and urban services?

Mail & Guardian
www.mg.co.za

join the conversation as urban experts focus on these and other questions, and debate alternatives for more inclusive, secure and productive South African cities

1 November 2010, 18:00 - 20:00, The Forum Turbine Hall Newtown Johannesburg
www.urbanlandmark.org